Catholic Energies
Conserve, Educate, Inspire

Message From Reclaiming Earth Committee

A new program of Catholic Climate Covenant is a 501C3 named Catholic Energies. It is the “first non-profit energy program designed with the specific needs of Catholic facilities in mind ... (it) helps Catholic facilities investigate, pay for and implement energy projects including energy procurement ... energy efficiency ... renewable energy ... energy storage ... best of all, this program costs nothing and provides a no-cost assessment of opportunities.” For more information, click here.

“The term (sustainability) has evolved to consider multiple dimensions beyond the environmental: social, economic, and cultural. Alongside sustainability, the field of environmental justice examines how climate change and environmental degradation are experienced inequitably across the globe. Both of these fields take justice seriously. So, what does integral ecology have to offer?”

Good question. To help you discover the answer for yourself, go to www.ipjc.org and look for A Matter of Spirit, Spring 2017. Front page of an issue dedicated to the question of integral ecology is an article by Jessica Ludescher Imanaka. You might want to read or review it if you have already read it.

The entire issue is good background and forward looking.
